Lesson Abstract:

Lessons are an important aspect in a student's musical development. They help instill habits of self-discipline, accountability, and confidence early on that will assist your student as they progress through their education and extracurriculars. As a result of these lessons, your student will develop a greater understanding of musical expression and technique, a greater confidence in their abilities, and the desire to improve their skills.

Expected Behavior:

Students should be receptive and open to critique. They should conduct themselves in a composed and focused manner—getting into the habit of this behavior now will benefit them as they explore future opportunities. To make proper use of our time, students should stay focused throughout the duration of their lesson and participate by answering and asking questions. Communication is the key towards getting the most out of a session.
